_____COMPLETE PAPERWORK
Set up a new employee file. Most areas require employers to keep records on everything—from employee hours to business taxes. As a result, it is important that you start an employee off correctly by keeping an accurate, complete and confidential file.

A plain letter size folder with at least 1/2 inch capacity will be sufficient. Label it with the employee's name and file alphabetically. Since these files are confidential, keep them in a locked cabinet. Limit access to management and owners.

Have, at a minimum, the following items in an employee's file:
- Original application
- Original resume (if supplied)
- W-4 form (U.S.)
- Tax forms
- I-9 form (U.S.)
- Working papers (if required of minor employees in your area)
- Reference checklist (if used during evaluation of candidate)
- Emergency information (if not included on the application)
- Signed Acknowledgment of receipt from Employee Handbook

Contact your local labor commission for a listing of any additional requirements you may need to meet.
Throughout the employee's career, add the following to the file:
- Performance reviews
- Written warnings
- Any commendations, awards or compliment letters received
