Social Health Insurance For Developing Nations Author William C Hsiao Jun 2009:

Social Health Insurance for Developing Nations R. Paul Shaw, 2007-01-01 Specialist groups have often advised health ministers and other decision makers in developing countries on the use of social health insurance SHI as a way of mobilizing revenue for health reforming health sector performance and providing universal coverage This book reviews the specific design and implementation challenges facing SHI in low and middle income countries and presents case studies on Ghana Kenya Philippines Colombia and Thailand

Health Insurance in Developing Countries Aviva Ron, Brian Abel-Smith, Giovanni Tamburi, 1990 This volume describes the evolution of the social security approach to health insurance from the first initiatives in Europe to the adaptation of the concept in other parts of the world It then focuses on benefits and financing and on the inter relationship between the social security system and government agencies particularly those dealing with health A concise review of the mechanisms involved in both the delivery of health services and providing payment is followed by an analysis of current administrative issues The second part contains country profiles of health care programmes in

Health Insurance for the Poor in Developing Countries Johannes Jütting, 2005 Basing his report on research conducted from 1997 to 2002 Jütting OECD Development Centre France argues that the social security and health of rural populations in developing countries have been under studied compared to production related factors of sustainable development Criticizing the traditional approach that believes that a shift from a

Social Health Insurance in Developing Countries Guy Carrin, 2014 This paper addresses the issue of the feasibility of social health insurance SHI in developing countries SHI aims at protecting all population groups against financial risks due to illness There are substantial difficulties in implementation however due to lack of debate and consensus about the extent of financial solidarity problems with health service delivery and insufficient managerial capacity The transition to universal coverage is likely to take many years but it can be speeded up Adopting a family approach to financial protection sustained financial support from governments and donors and deconcentrating the development of SHI may slash several years from the time needed to achieve full universal protection against healthcare costs

Extending Social Protection in Health Jens Holst, 2007 Tackles diverse issues such as universal coverage social dialogue poverty reduction through adequate health protection etc and gives examples of experiences from Africa Asia and Latin America Contains two ILO contributions Assane Diop ILO s Decent Work Agenda Goal for a fair globalisation and an abridged version of Impact of social health protection on access to health care health expenditure and impoverishment a comparative analysis of three African countries by Xenia Scheil Adlung et al Includes the Berlin recommendations for action emanating from the Conference as well as biographical notes of the speakers and a webliography

Social Health Insurance World Health Organization. Regional Office for the Western Pacific, World Health Organization. Regional Office for South-East Asia, 2005 Health development in countries of Asia and the Pacific is constantly facing new challenges but financial constraints prevent people from seeking timely health care and completing the treatment regimen. Many countries in Asia and the Pacific have introduced cost recovery by charging for publicly provided health services and the share of private financing in total health care spending has significantly increased in the past two decades. However, such reforms were carried out without adequate measures to protect the poor and private out-of-pocket financing is an inequitable and inefficient way of funding health services. There has thus been growing interest in health insurance not only as a financing mechanism but also as an effective social safety net. This publication is the outcome of joint efforts by the WHO Regional Offices for the Western Pacific and South East Asia, the Asian Development Bank and health care financing experts in the two regions. By the use of case studies, it documents regional experiences in health care financing arrangements through prepayment with critical analysis on factors linked to success, failures and lessons learnt in various socioeconomic settings. While experiences from 12 selected countries have been highlighted, the lessons are relevant for all countries in Asia and the Pacific. The publication will therefore be useful for policy makers and for international development partners undertaking technical assistance in the field of social security and social health insurance.

The Theory of Social Health Insurance Peter Zweifel, 2007. The Theory of Social Health Insurance develops the theory of social health insurance, also known as public health insurance. While a good deal is known about the demand and supply of private insurance, the theoretical basis of social health insurance is much more fragile. The Theory of Social Health Insurance examines questions including why does social health insurance exist and even dominate private health insurance in most developed countries. What are the objectives and constraints of social health insurance managers? What is the likely outcome or performance of social health insurance? The Theory of Social Health Insurance reviews the conventional theory of demand for insurance and health insurance, the supply of health insurance in general and social health insurance in particular, the properties of the optimal health insurance contract and whether there are factors limiting the growth of social health insurance.

Social Health Insurance T. Whitaker, 1999. Comprises eight modules which provide guidelines on the design and management of a social insurance scheme. Focuses on the needs of countries where social security systems are not yet operational or need to be improved. Describes the selection of health care benefits to be provided, the accreditation of service providers, methods of financing, provider payment mechanisms and organizational aspects. Includes a module on micro insurance schemes.

Going Universal, 2015. Three Essays on Social Health Insurance in Developing Countries Stephen Ofori Abrokwa, 2013. More than 2 billion people live in developing countries with health systems constrained by inequitable access and inadequate funding. The World Health Organization estimates that more than 150 million of these people suffer financial breakdown every year, having to make unexpected out-of-pocket expenditures for emergency care. To improve health and reduce the financial burden on households, a number of developing countries including Ghana, Colombia and Peru have recently introduced social health insurance programs which are heavily subsidized. The dissertation is a collection of three essays looking at how individual health care choices changed.

as a result of the availability of insurance coverage in Ghana The first essay evaluates health care choices and out of pocket expenditures after the introduction of social health insurance covering modern health care services When ill an individual decides between a set of alternatives no care alternative traditional medicine modern care and both alternative and modern care My results show that when health insurance becomes available individuals either switch to modern medical care or complement alternative care with modern care I also find that out of pocket expenditures decrease significantly across all the different types of care as a result of health insurance The second essay studies the effect of health insurance on household fertility decisions and examines whether the effect is due to women likely to become pregnant seeking out insurance or women with insurance changing fertility decisions To disentangle the effects of adverse selection from moral hazard I exploit district level variation in the dates of implementation of the national health insurance to instrument for insurance enrollment My results suggest that both adverse selection and moral hazard effects were present and fertility increased with insurance The third essay examines the role of social health insurance on prenatal care and expenditure using a two part model Results show that health insurance increases the propensity of pregnant women to seek prenatal care relative to the uninsured Insured pregnant women are more likely to seek prenatal care but conditional on any spending they spend less out of pocket compared to the uninsured

Planning and Implementing Health Insurance in Developing Countries Aviva Ron,1993

Social Protection and Preventing Illness in Developing Countries Peter Lloyd-Sherlock,Nadia Minicuci,John Beard,Somnath Chatterji,2012 This article assesses the effectiveness of pension provision and health insurance in preventing ill health among older people in developing countries It argues that until recently social protection agendas devoted insufficient attention to health risk prevention instead focusing on the reduction of income poverty through cash transfers The article shows that there is little reliable evidence to indicate that providing older people with pension benefits enhances their health status and that these effects should not be taken for granted by policy makers The article then focuses on the effect of inclusion in health insurance schemes on health outcomes for older people with specific reference to outcomes related to hypertension Drawing on newly available data from the World Health Organization for Ghana Mexico and South Africa it shows that older people with health insurance are marginally more likely to be aware of health conditions such as hypertension and more likely to have them under control Nevertheless the great majority of hypertensive older people insured or uninsured are not effectively treated The chief barriers to treatment are shown to be mainly related to awareness and service provision rather than financial ones Consequently the capacity of pensions or health insurance to enhance health outcomes for older people in such countries including in rural areas is heavily contingent upon health education health screening and adequate health service provision These interventions should be viewed as an integral element of mainstream social protection strategies rather than adjuncts to them Yet in practice social protection and health promotion continue to be treated as almost entirely separate spheres thus presenting substantial institutional barriers to developing combined
