

The Curious Case of the Stolen Show

As far as Saturdays tend to go, this is going to be one of the most exciting ever!

I've worked out that I've been alive for five hundred and ninety-eight Saturdays so far. How cool is that? I'm officially coming up to my six hundredth Saturday. I don't think any of them have been as awesome as this one is going to be, though. I'm going to see my favourite singer performing, for real, in the flesh, in a massive concert. Not just that but we're going to a tour launch event first. You see, the concert is the opening of Amasi's new world tour, right back here in our home city. She's from Sheffield, too, just like me. That's just one of a hundred reasons why I love her.

"Demi! Are you ready?"

That'll be one of my dads shouting upstairs. I don't know why he thinks he needs to shout – it's not like we live in a big house. You can hear every floorboard creak from every other room, no matter where you are, and I think the walls must be made out of cardboard. I don't know why he's asking if I'm ready, either. It's quarter past eight and, obviously, I've been up and ready for about two and a half hours. I was way too excited to sleep. All of my clothes were laid out last night. I know I didn't need to be up so early but I've literally been bouncing around ever since. I can feel my breakfast cereal swishing about in my tummy.

I know I said 'one of my dads' just then. I've got two dads but neither of them actually like being called 'Dad'. Go figure! They say it's better than the confusion of me calling them both the same thing. I think they just couldn't decide when I was little which one of them should be 'Dad'. So, instead, I've got Pappy and Dada.

Pappy is brilliant at helping me with maths and we both love reading stories. Sherlock Holmes is our favourite. Pappy also knows how to braid my hair properly – which is slightly surprising, seeing as he doesn't have any hair of his own! He's a bit more serious, though. He says it's because he gets stressed by his work.
