History of the Jews (Complete) Heinrich Graetz,2015-11-07 It was on a spring day that some pastoral tribes passed across the Jordan into a strip of land which can only be regarded as an extended coast line of the Mediterranean This was the land of Canaan subsequently called Palestine The crossing of the Jordan and the entry into this territory were destined to become of the utmost importance to mankind The land of which the shepherd tribes possessed themselves became the arena of great events so enduring and important in their results that the country in which they took place became known as the Holy Land Distant nations had no conception that the entry of the Hebrew or Israelite tribes into the land of Canaan would have such momentous consequences Even the inhabitants of Palestine were far from recognising in this invasion an occurrence fraught with vital significance to themselves At the time when the Hebrews occupied this territory it was inhabited by tribes and peoples dissimilar in descent and pursuits The primary place was held by the aborigines the Anakim and Rephaim a powerful race of giants Tradition represents them as the descendants of that unruly and overbearing race which in primeval times attempted to storm the heavens For this rebellious attempt they had been doomed to ignominious destruction Their reputed descendants the powerful natives of the country who by some of the ancient nations were called Emim terrible men were unable to maintain themselves notwithstanding their imposing figures they were destroyed by races of inferior stature The rest were obliged to migrate to the East Jordanic lands to the south and also to the south west of the West Jordanic region This remnant of the Anakim filled the Israelite spies with such abject terror that they made the entire nation despair of ever obtaining possession of the country This gave rise to the proverb Who can stand before the children of Anak We were said the spies in our own eyes as grasshoppers and so we appeared unto them These giants were eventually overcome by the Israelite dwarfs Another group of inhabitants which had settled in the land between the Mediterranean and the Jordan was that of the Canaanites whom the Greeks called Phoenicians These Phoenicians appear to have pursued the same employment in their new country as they had followed on the banks of the Red Sea or the Persian Gulf Their chief pursuits were navigation and commerce The position which they had selected was eminently favourable to their daring expeditions The great ocean forming a strait at the Pillars of Hercules and separating Europe from Africa as the Mediterranean Sea has here its extreme limit At the foot of the snow topped Lebanon and its spurs commodious inlets formed natural harbours that required but little improvement at the hand of man On this seaboard the Canaanites built the town of Sidon situated on a prominent crag which overhangs the sea They afterwards built on a small rocky island the port of Tyre which subsequently became celebrated they also built Aradus to the north of Sidon and Akko Acre to the south of Tyre The neighbouring forests of the Lebanon and the Anti Lebanon supplied them with lofty cedars and strong cypresses for ships The Canaanites who became the first mercantile nation in the world owed much of their success to the advantage of finding on their coast various species of the murex Tolaat shani from the fluid of which was obtained a most brilliant and widely celebrated purple dye The beautiful white sand of the river Belus near Acre supplied fine glass an article which was likewise in much request in the Old World The wealth of the country lay in the sands of the sea shore The Canaanites on account of their extensive trade required and introduced at an early period a convenient form of writing and their alphabet the Phoenician became the model for the alphabets of ancient and modern nations In a word the narrow belt of land between the Mediterranean and Mount Lebanon with its spurs became one of the most important points on the face of the globe
