

Rationale: A formal letter informing and persuading how women are degraded and objectified through the utilization of advertisements

For our IB HL Language and Literature English class, we have been studying Part 2: language and mass communication. In this topic, we experimented with advertising and gender stereotypes, and how our understanding of communicating with advertising has increased our knowledge regarding the distinction between genders. I have chose to work with the topic on the code of femininity, to demonstrate the unyielding power of men. Through the portrayal of headless and faceless women, I was able to emphasize the lack of individuality owned by women. To allow in-depth analysis and knowledge of this subject, I chose to compose a letter sending to the editor of Cosmopolitan magazine, arguing the immoral act of publishing advertisements that degrade and demean women.

To successfully communicate my purpose to the audience, I have chosen two advertisements as an example. Firstly, the Tom Ford advertisement is utilized to represent the objectification of women. It focuses on how women are visualized in advertisements that portray them as sex toys to create arousal in men. The Duncan Quinn Suit advertisement is analyzed to farther our knowledge of degrading women. Both advertisements depict a visual of a headless woman, supporting the argument that eliminating the model's face is equal to eliminating the individuality of each woman.

In conclusion, throughout this unit of study, I have learned that advertising can create a larger impact on ones perception. The specific text type of a letter allowed myself to provide a powerful message in a realistic and formal manner. Through specifically studying the behavior and quality differences in genders portrayed through advertising, I have concluded that society will continue to depict women as vulnerable and men as dominating and overpowering.
