

BANDOOLA'S LEGACY

After all that the elephants had done to help humans, Williams believed they deserved to be treated with kindness and respect, even after death. For him, the greatest honor bestowed on a dead elephant was to be placed in a position that humans could see, possibly side by side with the living elephants. It was a message that could be made

Looking back on his time as a young Williams reflected that "I have found my happiness not in considering myself a famous person or a leader from the rest of creation but in seeing that I live in unity with the rest of nature, what we call the universe. The sacred and beautiful feelings I had was that plants and animals have an incredible consciousness, an awareness of being, of what is good and what is perfect. That we humans are members of them is our enrichment. And is what the world has brought us."
