Smallpox As A Bioweapon Should We Be Concerned Defense:

Biological Weapons Defense Luther E. Lindler, Frank J. Lebeda, George Korch, 2007-10-27 In 2003 the President's budget for bioterrorism defense totalled more than 5 billion. Today the nation's top academic scientists are scrambling to begin work to understand Bacillus anthracis and develop new vaccines and drugs. However just five years ago only the US Department of Defense (DOD) seemed concerned about these exotic agents. In 1997 the DOD spent approximately 137 million on biodefense to protect the deployed force while academic industry, local governments and most of our federal leadership was oblivious to and in some cases doubtful of the seriousness of the threat. The National Institutes of Health (NIH) received the largest budget increase in the organization's history. Fortunately during this time of national urgency a sound base exists on which to build our defenses against this new threat. A relatively small cadre of dedicated scientists within the US Army Medical Research and Materiel Command (USAMRMC) laid this foundation over the past 20 years.

Biological Threats and Terrorism Institute of Medicine, Board on Global Health, Forum on Emerging Infections, 2002-03-07 In the wake of September 11th and recent anthrax events our nation's bioterrorism response capability has become an imminent priority for policymakers, researchers, public health officials, academia and the private sector. In a three day workshop convened by the Institute of Medicine's Forum on Emerging Infections, experts from each of these communities came together to identify, clarify and prioritize the next steps that need to be taken in order to prepare and strengthen bioterrorism response capabilities. From the discussions it became clear that of utmost urgency is the need to cast the issue of a response in an appropriate framework in order to attract the attention of Congress and the public in order to garner sufficient and sustainable support for such initiatives. No matter how the issue is cast, numerous workshop participants agreed that there are many gaps in the public health infrastructure and countermeasure capabilities that must be prioritized and addressed in order to assure a rapid and effective response to another bioterrorist attack.
