

Sony DADC's Digital Copy with PID

Digital Copy has scored a resounding success, especially in the U.S. market where it has been introduced for some time. However, like many first generation applications, it does have its weaknesses and unexploited Marketing potential.

To overcome these challenges and make the technology more consumer friendly, Sony DADC offers its customers a refined version of Digital Copy which integrates it alongside the company's proprietary PID system.

The beauty of Sony DADC's Digital Copy with PID lies in its simplicity. PID is Postencoded ID technology, which is applied to each disc during the manufacture process. The PID is automatically read by the player and does away with the need for cumbersome serial codes.

Yes, at the click of a mouse, the consumer can copy the movie over to a backup hard drive or many other media storage devices.

"Digital Copy provides a safe way of protecting discs from unauthorized copying whilst empowering consumers to watch their movie as they wish," comments Sony Music, Product Manager, Video at Sony DADC.

Digital Copy with PID comes with Bridge Analytics, a Sony DADC online platform that shows detailed statistics about the usage of Digital Copy.

In a short time, the publisher can construct a sophisticated profile of the consumer base, understanding how often, where, how they interact with their movies and what their preferences are within a diverse media driven world.

Digital Copy with PID provides a 'best in class' experience for both consumers and publishers.

"Digital Copy with PID combined with Bridge Analytics, fulfil two major needs of today's Home Entertainment marketers: to get valuable feedback about their consumers' preferences as well an opportunity to differentiate their product in a retail environment," comments Christian Dinkel, Head of Business Development at Sony DADC.
