These results at the group level are in keeping with the findings of other studies. For example, the study by Kohn et al. (2000) found that the group-level effect of the intervention was significant, but the individual-level effect was not. This may be due to the fact that the intervention was designed to target the group as a whole, rather than the individual. The study by Kohn et al. (2000) also found that the intervention had a significant effect on the group-level outcome of "overall group performance," but not on the individual-level outcome of "individual performance." This may be due to the fact that the intervention was designed to target the group as a whole, rather than the individual. The study by Kohn et al.
