Chapter 4

Are You Free?

Freedom and Determinism

CHAPTER SUMMARY

Most of the philosophical views on free will have to contend with determinism, the view that every event, including human actions is brought about by previous events in accordance with universal causal laws that govern the world. Human freedom is an illusion. Mill, Thiry, and d'Holbach are considered determinists. Compatibilists like Stace, Hobart, Hume, and Dennett maintain that determinism is compatible with free will, in that human actions can be considered "free" if they result from internal motivations, not external influences. Indeterminism holds that we are fully able to make decisions and initiate actions independently of any influences on our thinking. James and Sartre were of this mindset. A subset of indeterminism is libertarianism, which holds that a person could always "have done otherwise" in any given situation. James and Sartre. Feminist philosophers like Frye see oppression limits the possibility for genuine freedom. Physicalists like Crick and Churchland look to neuroscience to explain all brain states, yet others, like Noe, see neuroscience as demonstrating that consciousness is an achievement of the whole person within the environment.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the completion of the chapter, you will be able to:

- 4.1 Discuss the question "Are you the master of your fate?"
- 4.2 Explain the determinist view of human freedom.
- 4.3 Define compatibilism, the view that attempts to find a common ground between "hard" determinism and indeterminism (or libertarianism).
- 4.4 Explain the distinctions between indeterminism and libertarianism.
