

Mesopotamia was one of the earliest organized human settlements, so it is called the 'cradle of civilization'. The first civilizations in the region go back to around 6000 B.C. The rivers provided water for drinking, bathing, and other daily needs. People travelled up and down the rivers for trade. The rivers flooded every April or May and brought down rich alluvial soil, which was good for crops.

The Mesopotamian civilization is a broad name given to several civilizations that flourished in ancient Mesopotamia—the Sumerian, Akkadian, Babylonian, and Assyrian civilizations.

★ The fertile lowlands between the Euphrates and Tigris rivers became the birthplace of the ancient Mesopotamian civilization. More than six thousand years ago, Mesopotamians established some of the first cities, developed a writing system, and built large buildings and empires.
