Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged men (mean age 45.5 years, range 35–55 years) who were randomly assigned to either a 12-week training program (n = 20) or a control group (n = 20). The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes, and included aerobic and resistance training. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness, measured by maximal oxygen consumption (VO₂max), and blood pressure (BP). The results showed that the training program significantly improved HRQL, particularly in the physical functioning and role-physical domains. There were also significant improvements in VO₂max and BP in the training group compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged men.
